

CONTRIBUTORS

CARLA A. PFEFFER is assistant professor of sociology at Purdue University North Central. She is currently working on a book, under contract with Oxford University Press, tentatively titled Postmodern Partnerships: Women, Transgender Men, and Twenty-First Century Queer Families.

DELIA BALDASSARRI is associate professor of sociology at New York University. She uses social network theory and field experiments to address core themes in economic and political sociology. Her recent work focuses on how farmer cooperatives overcome collective action problems, in-group and out-group prosocial behavior, and public opinion trends in the United States.

AMIR GOLDBERG is assistant professor of organizational behavior at the Stanford Graduate School of Business. His research lies at the intersection of organization studies, cultural sociology, and network science and is particularly focused on understanding the social dynamics of meaning making.

GARRY C. GRAY is assistant professor of sociology, University of Victoria, Canada, and a research fellow at the Edmond J. Safra Center for Ethics, Harvard University. He is interested in regulatory governance, institutional compliance, and the social organization of unethical behavior inside institutions of public trust.

SUSAN S. SILBEY is the Leon and Anne Goldberg Professor of Sociology and Anthropology, School of Humanities Arts and Social Sciences, as well as professor of behavioral and policy sciences, Sloan School of Management, Massachusetts Institute of Technology. She is interested in the governance, regulatory, and audit processes in complex organizations, currently focusing on the creation of management systems for containing risks, including ethical lapses, as well as environment, health, and safety hazards in scientific laboratories.

ANDREAS WIMMER investigates the dynamics of nation-state formation, ethnic boundary making, and political conflict from a comparative perspective across social science disciplines and through various methods: field research in Oaxaca (Mexico) and Iraq, comparative historical analysis, quantitative cross-national research, network studies, formal modeling, and the analysis of large-scale survey data. His recent books are Ethnic Boundary Making (Oxford University Press 2013) and Waves of War (Cambridge University Press 2013).

THOMAS SOEHL is assistant professor in the Department of Sociology at McGill University. His research centers on international migration and intergenerational processes in migrant families.

WOOSEOK JUNG is a Ph.D. candidate in the Management and Organizations Department at Northwestern University. His research interests lie in economic sociology, organizational theory, and network analysis. In his dissertation, he explains the evolution of institutional complexity within elite U.S. law firms by focusing on interorganizational competitions and rivalry.

BRAYDEN G KING is associate professor at the Kellogg School of Management and (by courtesy) the Department of Sociology at Northwestern University. His research focuses on how social movement activists influence corporate behavior, organizational and social change, and legislative policymaking.

SARAH A. SOULE is the Morgridge Professor of Organizational Behavior at the Stanford Graduate School of Business. Her research is situated at the nexus of social movement and organizational studies; she strives to understand how social movement studies can inform organizational scholarship and how organizational studies can inform social movement studies.

DAVID STRANG is professor of sociology at Cornell University. His research focuses on the diffusion of organizational practices in the business and political worlds. He is author of Learning by Example: Imitation and Innovation at a Global Bank (2010). Current projects examine managerial hiring and firing, the adoption of peace resolutions in the wake of the Iraq War, and the impact of peer review in contemporary social science.

ROBERT J. DAVID is associate professor of strategy and organization and the Cleg-horn Faculty Scholar at the Desautels Faculty of Management, McGill University. He studies the evolution of management practices, organizational forms, and industries from an institutional perspective. He is currently involved in projects examining the role of institutions on entrepreneurship. He holds a Ph.D. from Cornell University.

SAEED AKHLAGHPOUR is a lecturer in innovation at Middlesex University Business School in London. His research examines diffusion, legitimation, and popularity of information technology and management innovations. His current project focuses on the adoption and use of social media technologies by organizations.